David Gorvitz represents businesses, business owners, investors, executives, and professionals in a wide variety of complex commercial disputes, involving contracts, business torts, real property rights, problems in heavily regulated industries, and other issues arising from commercial activity.

David often represents equity owners in privately-held entities, from family operations to businesses with hundreds of partners, in matters such as disagreements over minority rights, claims of breaches of fiduciary duties, freeze-outs, employment issues, and asset liquidations and distributions. Many entities David represents have international ownership.

Another focus of David's practice is real estate litigation. He has handled a number of commercial foreclosure cases. Working with members of the firm's Real Estate Group, he has advised commercial landlords, tenants, mortgagees, mortgagors, and tax certificate holders regarding their rights. David has also written on the subject of foreclosure.

Beyond business litigation, David has a robust fiduciary litigation practice. Working with members of the firm's Tax, Trusts and Estates Group, he regularly represents both fiduciaries and beneficiaries in a wide variety of complex disputes before probate courts.

David was a law clerk for the Hon. Harriet Derman, P.J.Ch., and Hon. Allison E. Accurso, P.J.Ch. of the Superior Court of New Jersey in 2008-2009. Prior to going to law school, he was a vice president at an investor relations and strategic consulting firm.
